

Keeping Consumers Safe

What is CPSC?

The Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC) is an independent government regulatory agency with a big mission—protecting YOU, the consumer, against unreasonable risks of injuries associated with consumer products. Report unsafe products to CPSC at SaferProducts.gov.

For over 50 years, CPSC has been:

- Issuing and enforcing mandatory standards or banning consumer products if no feasible standard would adequately protect the public;
- Obtaining the recall of products and arranging for a repair, replacement or refund for recalled products;
- Researching potential product hazards;
- Conducting data collection and analysis;
- Developing voluntary standards with standards organizations, manufacturers and businesses;
- Informing and educating consumers directly and through traditional, online, and social media and by working with foreign, state and local governments and private organizations; and
- Educating manufacturers worldwide about our regulations, supply chain integrity, and development of safe products.

CPSC recalls in the news:

- Water Beads
- Peloton Tread+
- Fisher Price Rock n' Play
- Samsung Galaxy Note 7 Smartphones

Report unsafe products:
SaferProducts.gov
(800) 638-2772
or (800) 638-8270
(for deaf or hard of hearing individuals)

United States
Consumer Product Safety Commission

CPSC.gov
f @ x v y in
USCPSC